The Right Place for Heart Care

A Move to Zanesville Saved Her Life

Art is a way of life for Linda Regula who has been painting for the past 30 years. Linda infuses her passion for life into each painting. No surprise, then, that Linda's passion for painting – and the skill of a Genesis physician – played a part in saving her life.

"At Genesis the staff always treats me with a caring, respectful attitude, and I never feel as if I'm just another number,"

Linda Regula

Five years ago, Linda and her husband, Jim Warren, decided to leave Columbus for a slower pace. However, with Jim's health challenges – a dozen major surgeries in the previous three years – they needed access to quality hospitals.

"We talked with his doctors in Columbus," recalled Linda. "They told us that Zanesville had a first-rate hospital capable of handling any problem [Jim] had."

Zanesville not only offered the quality of Genesis HealthCare System, it also had a vibrant art community – important to Linda and Jim, who is also a painter. Hospitals and art: "Those were the two things that drew us to Zanesville," said Linda.

After the move, the couple jumped into the local art scene and became active community volunteers. But just three years later, it was Linda's health that took a surprising turn.

A few days after returning from a writers' workshop in Kentucky, Linda was relaxing on the sofa when she suddenly felt nauseated. "When I stood up, I felt sweaty and dizzy," she said. Jim asked what was wrong and she brushed it off believing she was just catching a cold. Jim wasn't convinced and rushed her to the hospital.

In the emergency room, Linda underwent several tests but none identified the problem. However, the cardiac doctor on call persevered and determined that a virus had attacked Linda's heart and interrupted its electrical system. Within minutes, Linda was on her way to Columbus for a pacemaker/defibrillator.

Since Linda's incident, Genesis has brought on its own electrophysiologist, M. Magdy Migeed, M.D., a cardiologist who handles pacemakers, defibrillators and more. "Now I don't have to go to Columbus anymore," Linda said. "And I have a cardiologist here who monitors me every three months. If something happens, they can handle it here."

When Linda returned to Zanesville, she participated in Genesis' cardiac rehabilitation program where she learned how to live with her heart condition by exercising and losing weight, among other lifestyle changes.

"I followed what they asked me to do," said Linda. "Today there are no limitations on my activities."

I do whatever I want to do. The rehab staff gave me the motivation, emotional support and knowledge to make the quality of my life better."

Linda's experience gives a unique perspective and comparison between health care in Columbus and at Genesis. From Linda's point of view, there is little to compare.

"At Genesis the staff always treats me with a caring, respectful attitude, and I never feel as if I'm just another number," Linda said. "During my heart problem, they looked beyond mild flu-like symptoms. They looked outside the box – and they saved my life."

Among the Best in Patient Satisfaction

Genesis is committed to providing high quality health care to the community, which is why we continually introduce new technology, services and specialties to our hospitals and facilities. But equally important is the way we deliver care – the “customer service” side of health care. And that focus is getting some attention. For the last four consecutive quarters, Genesis has scored in the top 10 percent of health care systems in the country in overall patient satisfaction in the Press Ganey inpatient satisfaction surveys.

Sounds good, but what does it all mean? First you need to know who Press Ganey is: a consulting firm that gathers patient feedback for more than 7,000 health care organizations, including nearly 40 percent of U.S. hospitals, to measure and improve their quality of care. When Press Ganey reports that Genesis’ customer satisfaction scores are in the top 10 percent of health care systems in the country, you can be certain that number carries some serious weight.

How are we attaining such a high level of customer satisfaction? We started with some basics, such as asking employees to recommit to the Genesis mission of providing compassionate, quality health care, and providing education and support to employees to help them with that recommitment.

A communication tool developed by the Studer Group – AIDET – was introduced to employees to help them improve customer service. AIDET stands for Acknowledge, Introduce, Duration, Explanation and Thank You – and it represents how hospital staff can gain trust and communicate with people who are nervous, anxious and feeling vulnerable.

The Genesis scorecard was developed to track every aspect of the organization, allowing leadership and front-line employees to know where improvements need to be made. Other efforts have included Lean Six Sigma, a tool that focuses on streamlining processes in an organization down to just those tasks that add value as well as achieving and maintaining a near-zero error rate.

Many other efforts are underway as we continue to strive to make the Genesis experience as positive as possible for our patients and their families – so they can focus on getting healthy and staying healthy.

After about four weeks at Good Samaritan, Ron was transferred to Genesis-Bethesda and was admitted to the inpatient rehabilitation program. “I was at Bethesda rehab for two weeks where I had several therapists work with me every day,” said Ron. “My speech and vocabulary were affected so I worked with a speech therapist. The physical therapist helped me walk and helped with my balance – my equilibrium had also been affected.”

Released from the hospital in mid November, Ron has continued recovering at home. He said recovery can be slow; his vision is still somewhat impaired and he struggles to keep his balance when he walks. “As long as I’m sitting or touching something, I do pretty well,” Ron said. Ron’s recreational therapist, Libby Hardwick, RTC/R, used a special piece of equipment while he was in the hospital – a three-wheeled tricycle – to help Ron in his recovery. He was so impressed with it, he purchased a similar one of his own to help him at home.

Ron’s latest experience is by no means his first encounter with medical care. “I have a lot of experience being a patient in hospitals,” Ron explained. “I’ve had knee reconstruction, back surgery, triple hernia surgery, bypass surgery, stents and I have a defibrillator.” Ron rattled off several facilities where he received care, including hospitals in Orlando, Florida; Columbus; and Zanesville.

“I’ve found the atmosphere at Genesis to be exemplary,” the former Zanesville High football coach said. “It’s as good as or better than any other hospital. As an old coach and school administrator, I look for cleanliness, orderliness and the way they run things. I couldn’t say anything except they were great at Genesis.”

Debbie’s hospital experience as Ron’s cheerleading and support team was equally positive. In fact, Debbie said the recent care at Genesis was even better than Ron’s experience just a few years ago.

“You could tell the whole atmosphere of the hospital had really changed,” said Debbie. “It’s just a total 180-degree turnaround in the attitude of all the people who walked in the room: the housekeeper, the transporter, the nurse – everyone. Whatever that atmosphere – however they changed it – it permeated every person we came in contact with.”

“There’s no question in my mind we have the greatest facility,” Debbie added. “You don’t have to go outside this community to get a quality facility with caring physicians and staff – because we have it right here.”

Ron Apperson poses with Libby Hardwick, recreational therapist, and the three-wheeled tricycle he uses for therapy.

As Good – or Better – Than Any Other Health Care System

Oct. 10, 2009 started out like any other day for Debbie Apperson. She had gone to work at the local orthopedic office just as she had for the past 11 years, but then she got the call from her husband, Ron. “He was at home,” Debbie remembered. “He called and said, ‘Come home.’ I knew something was really wrong because he couldn’t talk on the phone.”

By the time Debbie got home, Ron was on the floor. He couldn’t stand or move and just kept holding his head. “It was pretty scary,” Debbie said.

Ron was transported by ambulance to Genesis-Good Samaritan where he was diagnosed as having suffered a stroke that affected his speech, motor skills and vision. “At Good Samaritan I was not functional,” Ron said. “I didn’t know what was going on. My wife took care of making the decisions with the doctors.”

The Future of Patient Care Is on Its Way to Genesis

Imagine this scenario.

John collapses at work and is rushed to the local hospital emergency room. His co-workers are unaware of any medical conditions, but emergency room staff immediately pull up John's medical record on the computer. A report from John's recent visit to his regular physician gives the medical team enough information to pinpoint the problem. They successfully treat John's condition without delay.

What may sound like something from the future is actually in the works at Genesis today. Following months or preliminary research and planning, we are ready to begin installing Epic, a high-tech clinical information system that will change the way everything about health care is done. The key component of this system is the use of electronic medical records, or EMRs.

EMRs will give three main audiences secure access to patient medical records: medical staff within the hospital; medical providers outside of the hospital (e.g., in a physician office or a clinic); and patients. Understandably, EMRs provide real advantages to each group.

"In the hospital, the EMR will replace the paper chart," explained Dan Scheerer, M.D., Vice President of Medical Affairs for Genesis. "All documentation of patients' care and conditions will be entered into EMRs rather than putting it into a paper chart. This enables clinicians, nurses and others to have information at their fingertips."

Added safety is an important benefit of the new EMRs. Orders will be typed into the patient record eliminating potential problems deciphering handwriting. Also, medications delivered at the patient bedside will be scanned and checked against the EMR to ensure their accuracy.

"This sets us up to be among the leading health care delivery systems in the country."

Ed Romito, Vice President and Chief Information Officer

The system will also include order sets for care delivery – established procedures for patient care based on scientifically proven techniques. The order sets provide physicians with bedside access to guidelines for care they can implement as appropriate.

Outside of the hospital, electronic medical records will provide advantages to physician offices as well. "The nice thing is that physicians who use this in the office will have a seamless interface with the hospital," said Dr. Scheerer. "When physicians see patients in the office, they'll see the patients' records just as if they were in the hospital."

And patients, too, will be able to access their records through MyChart. Using this system, patients could access lab reports, request prescription refills and potentially e-mail their physician's office as well as schedule certain kinds of appointments online.

"The Epic project supports the goal of having a single community medical record for each patient. This one-patient, one-record concept will minimize delays in accessing information regardless of where the patient enters the health care system," said Ed Romito, Vice President and Chief Information Officer. "This sets us up to be among the leading health care delivery systems in the country. A year from now we'll be among a small percentage of hospitals in the country that have a fully functional electronic medical record system. This will set us apart."

Genesis is making progress in its commitment to recruit new physicians.

In 2009, 30 new physicians have joined the medical staff and we are actively recruiting more. Shown here are our newest physicians.

Menna Berhane, M.D.
